

ACQUA ALTA - NOVEMBER 2019

Efforts are underway across Venice and the lagoon islands to assess fully the flood-damage caused by three separate and extremely high tides between 12-17 November. There have been heartbreaking losses for those living in accommodation on ground floors and for shops, bars, restaurants, hotels and all those businesses that sustain life in Venice and make time spent in the city so enjoyable for visitors.

The clean-up operation has seen everyone across the city pitching in and there are a number of fund-raising initiatives.

Venice in Peril is asking for donations to meet the immediate challenges faced by the city's world-famous monuments and to be ready to support longer term projects once damage has been fully assessed.

There are 2000 buildings in Venice on the Italian heritage lists and of these about 60 of the city's 120 churches have been affected by prolonged exposure to saltwater. It will cost about 60,000 euros just to cover the initial cleaning costs and secure the sites. The full extent of the damage to buildings, including stone and marble coverings on walls and floors, will only become evident in coming months.
